It was in Topekn and some of the men at the club were discussing the bigotry which led a lot of Kansas preachers to object to the publication of Gene Ware's "Washerwoman's Song" in a school book. Lawyer Downey, who is an Iriahman by birth and education, listened for a time and then he told the following story:

"Speaking of bigotry, gentlemen, I think the most bigoted man I ever knew was a little old Irish Presbyterian by the name of Mchael Fear, who used to live in my parts in Ireland. We had a county ordinance there which required every man to paint his name on the shafts of all the carts or other implements he might own, the purpose height of its their ownership for taxation. Fear had a number of carts, but he obstinately refused to obey the ordinance, and in due time he was hauled before the county magistrate. The magistrate was a lenient old fellow who had no desire to punish his neighbors, so he said in a fatherly manner to the culprit:

"Now, Micky Fear, I want you to go hone and paint your name in plain known, I it is a good law, a necessary law, and every man ought to obey it, and if you do not obey it, in a reasonable time, I shall be compelled to time you.

"Micky backed away to the court bouse door and then shouted: Fine, an' be done to year! I'll not paint me name on the ca-arts in Roman letters! To he wid the pope."
